Nāgabodhi’s Samājasādhanavyavasthāna: The Tibetan Translation and Sanskrit Text of 3-1-3 to 3-3-3

by Kimiaki TANAKA

The Samājasādhanavyavasthāna (hereafter: Vyavasthāna), attributed to Nāgabodhi/ Nāgabuddhi of the Ārya school of interpretation of the Guhyasamāja-tantra, explains the philosophical significance of yoga involving the use of the manḍala, and considerable importance has been attached to it in Tibetan Buddhism, especially in the dGe-lugs-pa school. But until recently no Sanskrit manuscript of this work had been discovered. I found, however, that there is a parallel passage in the Sanskrit manuscript of the Vajrācāryanayottama discovered in Nepal. Unfortunately this section is damaged in the Kathmandu manuscript of the Vajrācāryanayottama (Ms. K), a fact which prevented me from making any further progress in the study of the Vyavasthāna. But it was subsequently brought to my notice that another manuscript of the Vajrācāryanayottama (Ms. Gb) is included in Sector B of photograph Xc14/30 among the manuscripts photographed by Rāhula Sāṅkṛtyāyana and later acquired by the Niedersächsische Staats- und Universitätsbibliothek, Göttingen, and that it was possible to recover approximately one-eighth of the original Sanskrit text. I also discovered that a complete manuscript of the Vyavasthāna (Ms. Ga) is included in Sector A of photograph Xc14/30, but regrettably the photograph suffers from halation and is partially illegible. It is therefore difficult to recover the entire Sanskrit text of the Vyavasthāna, but as far as the passage quoted in the Vajrācāryanayottama is concerned, it is possible to refer to three Sanskrit manuscripts in addition to the Tibetan translation. In this article I have therefore transcribed the Sanskrit text of the passage quoted in the Vajrācāryanayottama together with the Tibetan translation. For further details, reference should be made to pp. 296-282.